Introduction

This Insights Discovery profile is based on Jeremy Chia's responses to the Insights Preference Evaluator which was completed on 5 October 2026.

The origins of personality theory can be traced back to the fifth century BC, when Hippocrates identified four distinct energies exhibited by different people. The Insights System is built around the model of personality first identified by the Swiss psychologist Carl Gustav Jung. This model was published in his 1921 work “Psychological Types” and developed in subsequent writings. Jung’s work on personality and preferences has since been adopted as the seminal work in understanding personality and has been the subject of study for thousands of researchers to the present day.

Using Jung's typology, this Insights Discovery profile offers a framework for self-understanding and development. Research suggests that a good understanding of self, both strengths and weaknesses, enables individuals to develop effective strategies for interaction and can help them to better respond to the demands of their environment.

Generated from several hundred thousand permutations of statements, this profile is unique. It reports statements which your Evaluator responses indicate may apply to you. Modify or delete any statement which does not apply, but only after checking with colleagues or friends to identify whether the statement may be a “blind spot” for you.

Use this profile pro-actively. That is, identify the key areas in which you can develop and take action. Share the important aspects with friends and colleagues. Ask for feedback from them on areas which seem particularly relevant for you and develop an action plan for growth personally and interpersonally.

Overview

These statements provide a broad understanding of Jeremy's work style. Use this section to gain a better understanding of his approaches to his activities, relationships and decisions.

Personal Style

Jeremy is an ingenious and original problem solver. Although quiet and reserved, he can articulate well on a subject to which he is devoted. He is good at organising and bringing ideas into the plan. He is usually neat, tidy and orderly, both at work and at home. He tries to use logical principles to make sense of the ideas that constantly arise in his mind.

A capacity for cool emotional detachment makes Jeremy a good decision maker, because he thinks clearly under pressure. He uses his thinking to run as much of the world as he can and is in his element when a situation needs to be organised, criticised or regulated. He is persevering, with a singleness of purpose that he devotes to long term achievement of the mind. He is an ideal academic who continually seeks knowledge for its own sake. He typically does not take constructive criticism and disagreement personally. He welcomes tough, accurate, unrelenting critiques as helpful in achieving the highest levels of performance and objectivity. Both for himself and others, fun, relaxation and free time are scheduled and prioritised events.

Jeremy is seen by many people as being independent and self-contained. Independent, logical and determined, he may work well with computers if this involves research or analysis. He may appear more tolerant of others who prefer to operate in a moderate or controlled way. He is aesthetically appreciative and values quality. He often sees when colours match or blend and may have a highly developed taste for art, music and food. He is not impressed with authority as such but can conform to rules if he sees them as useful to his greater purpose.

His need to detach himself from his emotions allows him to retain objectivity when assisting others in times of stress. The process of analysis is often more challenging to him of itself than actually doing what needs to be done. His aim is to fit all the pieces of the jigsaw together into a complete picture, but for Jeremy the jigsaw keeps expanding with the discovery of every new piece. His ideas are generally abstract, containing intellectual insight, but he finds the practicalities of carrying out and developing these ideas to a conclusion less interesting. Although uninterested in purely scholastic pursuits, knowledge is important for its immediate usefulness to him.

His interest lies in seeing possibilities beyond what is already present and known, by using his insight, ingenuity and intellect. He values the development of his intellectual awareness and the opportunity to learn, improve and grow. He is intensely curious and is always seeking to find coherence in endless amounts of data. He is self-contained, intellectual and fair. He approaches people and events as a dispassionate observer, with the objective of arriving at the most comprehensive truth.

Interacting with Others

Jeremy needs minimal supervision and will work hard in a system that gives him independence. He may become evasive or reactive if overwhelmed by the constraints and demands of others. He is suspicious of what may be lurking beneath a smile. He may need to work at taking the feelings of others into account and to learn to express his appreciation of others more readily. He does not take criticism personally, and is often surprised to discover that others may be hurt or offended by the constructive criticism he can offer. He doesn't often encourage others to challenge his views.

Jeremy will tend to talk openly only about subjects he knows well and which allow him to share his great breadth of information. He may prefer not, or may find it difficult, to express personal feelings to others. He may lack an understanding of how his behaviour affects others and can be critical and blunt in giving recommendations for improvement. If he is given time to organise his thoughts by a sympathetic and understanding chairperson, he can state his views with clarity and to everyone's benefit. He is excellent at detecting the flaws in an idea but may neglect to praise good work.

When he turns his highly honed critical appraisal skills on the people around him, honesty may be translated into unintended hurtfulness. He may be highly critical of carelessness or lack of discipline in others. He tends to withdraw when he is put under pressure. He should try to establish whether his ideas are relevant and not ignore the feedback he might receive. He may feel under strain if he is unclear about what is expected of him or if duties at work are subject to change at short notice.

Decision Making

Jeremy learns through exploration, discussion and by asking searching questions. He understands the need for unbiased, critical judgement. He may prefer at times to communicate his feelings about others in writing, rather than verbally. Making decisions comes logically to him, although his need for detachment results in colleagues viewing him as rather distant. He is impressed by reason and logic and prefers to focus his thinking on the underlying principles.

Jeremy thinks in extremely complex ways and seeks to organise concepts and ideas rather than people. He usually delays decision making until all the facts and details are available. He tends to be influenced by the idea, rather than the people behind the idea. He applies analysis and objectivity to discover the underlying principles, relying on clear thinking in making decisions. He may lack patience with others who are less focused on the job in hand.

With a love of problem solving, he can be very perceptive and has a highly developed capacity for inner reflection. Using past experiences to help him solve current problems and get things done is one of his strong points. He may be more interested in the challenge of searching for the solution than seeing the solution put to practical use. He tends to make sound future decisions only after deeper reflection. He views life as an intellectual challenge and needs to think things through before deciding.

Key Strengths & Weaknesses

Possible Weaknesses

Jung said “wisdom accepts that all things have two sides”. It has also been said that a weakness is simply an overused strength. Jeremy's responses to the Evaluator have suggested these areas as possible weaknesses.

Jeremy's possible weaknesses:

- Over-dependence on rules and procedures.
- May be seen as too critical and sceptical.
- Usually puts facts before feelings.
- Dislikes disruptions and sudden change.
- May get frustrated with other peoples' ways.
- His perfectionism can be seen to be “nit picking” when not valued.
- Over evaluation can slow down his decisions.
- His need to assimilate information takes time. This may frustrate others who expect a more immediate response.
- Others sometimes find him over-controlling.
- Lacks empathy for others in some situations.

Value to the Team

Each person brings a unique set of gifts, attributes and expectations to the environment in which they operate. Add to this list any other experiences, skills or other attributes which Jeremy brings, and make the most important items on the list available to other team members.

As a team member, Jeremy:

- Ensures reflection, analysis and precision.
- Has intensive problem-solving capabilities.
- Will never be influenced by emotion alone.
- Helps the team cope with complexity.
- Directs the team's efforts towards important issues.
- Encourages the team to honour its commitments.
- Identifies the key elements of important situations.
- Will help the team to work more effectively.
- Ensures the focus is realistic.
- Critically perceptive with an eye for detail.

Communication

Effective Communications

Communication can only be effective if it is received and understood by the recipient. For each person certain communication strategies are more effective than others. This section identifies some of the key strategies which will lead to effective communication with Jeremy. Identify the most important statements and make them available to colleagues.

Strategies for communicating with Jeremy:

- If details need to be communicated, be prepared for a deferred decision.
- Allow him time to consider all the information.
- Recognise his intellectual effort and commitment.
- Let him organise his thoughts.
- Listen to his opinions.
- Provide evidence to appeal to his senses.
- Be thoroughly prepared.
- Keep the conversation impersonal.
- Respect his values and principles.
- Be precise and detailed.
- Take things one step at a time.
- Organise your thoughts before communicating.

Communication

Barriers to Effective Communication

Certain strategies will be less effective when communicating with Jeremy. Some of the things to be avoided are listed below. This information can be used to develop powerful, effective and mutually acceptable communication strategies.

When communicating with Jeremy, DO NOT:

- Forget to appreciate his boundaries
- Waste his time with irrelevancies.
- Dismiss his work, ideas or opinions lightly.
- Go to a meeting with him without adequate facts and figures.
- Take adversity light-heartedly.
- Be illogical or obscure.
- Fail to be attentive to his suggestions.
- Cut him short or discourage him when he wishes to share information.
- Exaggerate.
- Jump in head first or too quickly.
- Try to pin the blame on him.
- Be immature, childish or silly.

Possible Blind Spots

Our perceptions of self may be different to the perceptions others have of us. We project who we are onto the outside world through our “persona” and are not always aware of the effect our less conscious behaviours have on others. These less conscious behaviours are termed “Blind Spots”. Highlight the important statements in this section of which you are unaware and test them for validity by asking for feedback from friends or colleagues.

Jeremy's possible Blind Spots:

Jeremy would sometimes benefit from finding out what matters emotionally to others. He is something of a perfectionist, and can be hypersensitive to criticism of his work. Giving in on small items decreases the likelihood of him being seen as too stubborn and controlling.

Jeremy may reflect longer than is necessary before undertaking or beginning a project. Gathering relevant and factual data to help ensure that his ideas are workable, he needs to simplify his often theoretical and complicated ideas for the benefit of others. He would do well to accept that people he respects may want to know what is going on in his life, and he should realise that the only one who can provide the accurate map is him. Seeking the input and suggestions of others may help him recognise an impractical idea earlier and help him make improvements. He needs to work toward becoming more articulate and action-oriented.

Jeremy may become so engrossed with his own projects that other important tasks lie forgotten. Jeremy prefers not to confront issues. This may prevent matters from moving to a satisfactory conclusion. He is a private person who keeps an emotional distance from others and a physical distance when communicating. He carries on personal interests rather privately without involving other workmates in his conduct. He has a “let's do it and not talk about it” approach to work, which others may find difficult to handle.

Opposite Type

The description in this section is based on Jeremy's opposite type on the Insights Wheel. Often, we have most difficulty understanding and interacting with those whose preferences are different to our own. Recognising these characteristics can help in developing strategies for personal growth and enhanced interpersonal effectiveness.

Recognising your Opposite Type:

Jeremy's opposite Insights type is the Inspirer, Jung's "Extraverted Feeling" type.

Inspirers are outgoing and enthusiastic, seeking favourable social environments where they can develop and maintain contacts. Verbally effusive, they are good at promoting their own ideas. They can create enthusiasm in others for their cause. They have a wide network of acquaintances and relationships.

Jeremy will notice that the Inspirer tends to misjudge the abilities of self and others. Inspirers often leap to favourable conclusions without all of the information. To Jeremy they may appear inconsistent. Inspirers find controlling and planning their time difficult. The Inspirer is a smooth talking persuader and may appear indifferent to people, such as Jeremy, who appear to be not such "extraverted achievers" as themselves. However, Inspirers sometimes take conflict or rejection personally and bitterly.

Many Inspirers are convinced that they are naturally superior and may come across to Jeremy as somewhat boastful. They will prefer communicating orally rather than through the written word and may dislike and avoid tasks that require attention to detail or heavy paperwork. Jeremy may perceive Inspirers as shallow or superficial, due to their glib way with words.

Opposite Type

Communication with Jeremy's Opposite Type

Written specifically for Jeremy, this section suggests some strategies he could use for effective interaction with someone who is his opposite type on the Insights Wheel.

Jeremy Chia: How you can meet the needs of your Opposite Type:

- Be aware of his social interests.
- Don't be too serious, dull or severe.
- Be spontaneous and harmonious.
- Adopt a low key, positive approach.
- Be clear on completion details.
- Use a casual, informal style of conversation.

Jeremy Chia: When dealing with your opposite type DO NOT:

- Judge, criticise or embarrass him in public.
- Over-delegate “key” responsibilities, deadlines and general tasks.
- Isolate him from regular contact with others.
- Stick rigidly to business issues.
- Make your lack of interest in his “problems” too obvious.
- Use destructive criticism or create unnecessary conflict.

Suggestions for Development

Insights Discovery does not offer direct measures of skill, intelligence, education or training. However, listed below are some suggestions for Jeremy's development. Identify the most important areas which have not yet been addressed. These can then be incorporated into a personal development plan.

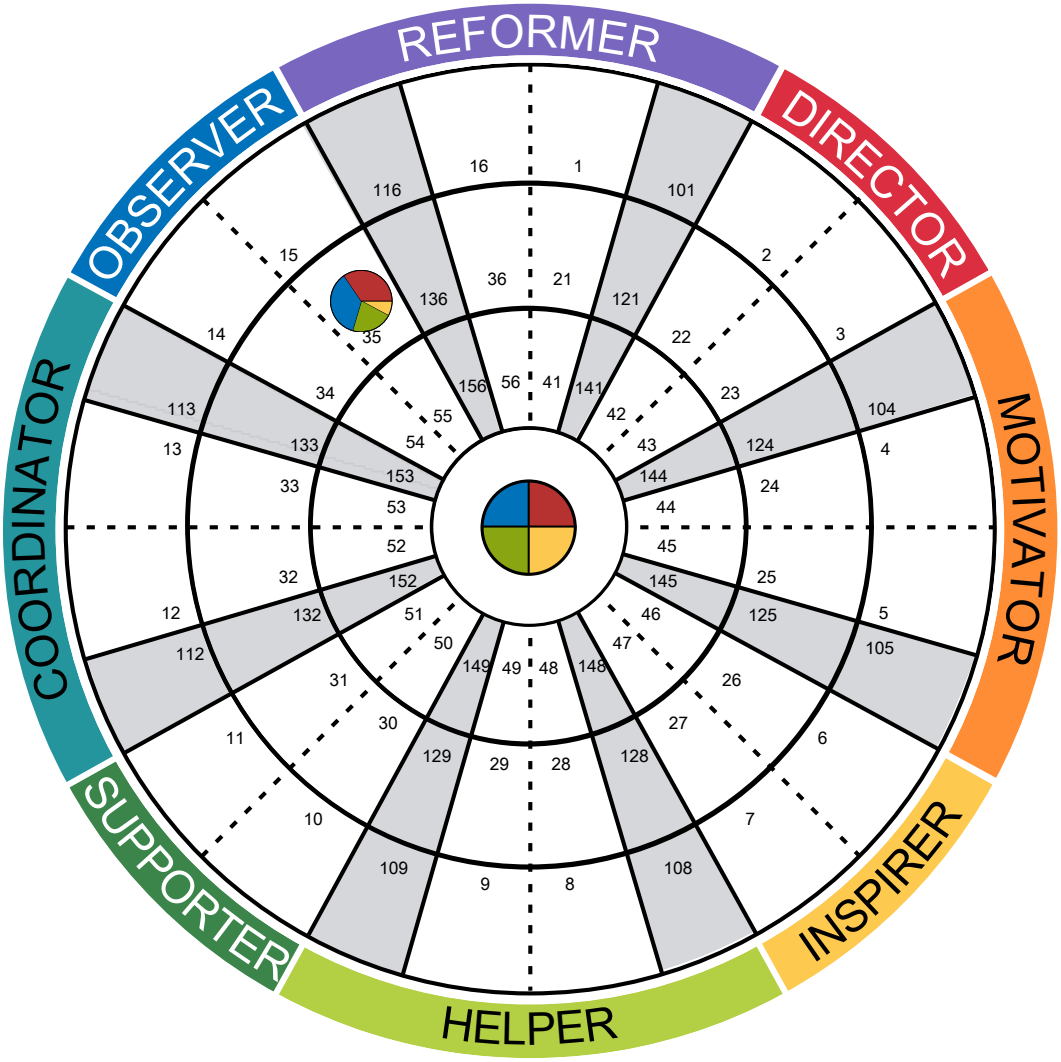

Jeremy may benefit from:

- Giving a higher priority to fun and spontaneity.
- Meeting with and talking to more assertive and energetic people.
- Articulating his ideas, rather than keeping them to himself.
- Remembering that many people will interpret his apparently shy demeanour as aloofness.
- Responding spontaneously and dramatically.
- Taking time out to dream about possibilities.
- Practising initiating conversation, particularly small talk, with strangers.
- Taking a risk by becoming more outspoken.
- Breaking the routine and doing something outrageous.
- Reading motivational books and listening to motivational content.
